The Eurasian Hobby

English edition of the monograph »Der Baumfalke« [The Hobby], updated and enhanced with latest scientific results

This current edition evaluates Klaus Dietrich Fiuczynski's long-term studies of Berlin and Brandenburg Hobbies during which more than 1500 nestlings were ringed. The study addresses questions relating to natal philopatry, site fidelity, and sexual maturity. The author pays particular attention to the results of satellite telemetry – a breakthrough in migration research – and discusses the risks and benefits of European migration routes: in 2008 the worldwide first female German Hobby was equipped with a new 5 g satellite radio transmitter under the guidance of Prof. Dr. Bernd-Ulrich Meyburg, which lead to groundbreaking insights on the African migration routes and movement in winter quarters. The population of the Eurasian Hobby is still endangered in some parts of Europe. This book aims to broadly impart knowledge essential for the effective environmental protection.
